

Who is the Center of your Universe?

5- All the time 4-Most of the time 3-Sometimes 2-Rarely
1-Never

Conversations with others

- You most of the talking.
- You are able to make the conversation about you.
- They ask most of the questions.
- You learn little to nothing new about the person you are talking to.
- You didn't ask any questions about the other person unless it related to your own life or experiences.

Listening to others

- You don't really listen to what people are saying.
- You don't look at the person who is talking.
- When someone is talking you are looking for a break so you can talk.

Relating to others

- You are more focused on being right than understanding the other person's position.
- You get moody or pout if you feel like you "lost" the conversation.
- Being with people feels more like a competition, to be noticed, heard or seen.
- You have a hard time putting yourself in someone else's shoes.
- You rarely think about how your friends or family are feeling.
- You regularly upset people but have no idea you have done it.

Spending time with others

- When you are out, it is important to come off as interesting, charming, cute or special.
- You've found yourself walking away from hanging out with people thinking that you did a great job of sounding smart, cool, or interesting.
- You go home after being with people without thinking about the people you spoke to.

Your thought patterns

- You spend a lot of time rehashing what you said, remembering how many times you made people laugh, or thinking about which people in a social situation were really noticed you.
- You tend to distrust or ignore feedback from others.
- When someone says something negative about you, you get defensive or angry.
- When something goes wrong or isn't finished, you automatically blame everyone else.
- You do not think you make mistakes.

Scores

0-45: You are a normal level of selfish. In your universe, you are important but you see and care about the planets around you.

46-66: In your universe, you are pushing your way to the center, knocking the smaller planets out of the way.

67-87: In your universe, other planets exist to orbit you.

88 or above: You are a full fledge narcissist and are endanger of imploding into a black hole.